

"I will not be subjugated"

Tactical Scenario

By
Mark Henry

Today, Friday, is a beautiful day in the summer. This is the start of a long weekend at the lake with your family. The only item to complete on your check list is to go to the bank to pick up some cash and make the mortgage payment. Your spouse has some final packing to do so you take your 13 year old daughter with you.

The bank branch is about 2 miles from your house. As you enter the bank and take a quick look around. Consciously, you note where the exit doors are located. Nothing is out of place on your review of the bank and the people. Your favorite teller recognizes you and motions you to come to the window for the transaction. No one except banking people, you and your daughter are in the bank.

As you complete the transactions you see a man about 6 foot tall enter the bank with his sweatshirt hood over his head and a mask covering his mouth and nose. In his right hand is a tire iron. He walks straight to the teller window beside you. Nothing is said by the man. He looks at you in a menacing manner but turns his attention to the teller. A note is passed to a teller that appears frighten.

You are carrying your usual gear which is legal in this state.

Here are questions you need to answer for yourself:

1. Have you thought about what you would do in a situation such as this?
2. Do you have a plan for situation described above?
3. What would you do in this particular situation?

(June 2008 #20)