

"I will not be subjugated"

Tactical Scenario

By
Mark Henry

It is Saturday afternoon in the springtime. It is a nice pleasant clear day with the temperature about 60 degrees. Your spouse has asked you to pick up some milk at the grocery store. This milk is for a favorite recipe of yours. While you are in the checkout line, a police officer walks into the store to pick up a coffee at the coffee shop in the front of the grocery store. While getting coffee, the officer spots someone in the store who clearly has her attention. The officer uses the radio presumably to call for backup. The person of interest, a rather large and strong looking male, starts moving quickly to the parking lot door as he notices the officer looking at him. The officer yells stop and moves towards him. The person of interest ignores the request and starts to run for the exit. The police officer in pursuit makes a great tackle and brings the guy down. A floor fight starts as the officer tries to subdue the male who did not want to be apprehended. A few moments into the fight, it is obvious the officer is not big enough to overpower and subdue this large male. Soon, the male is on top of the officer occasionally getting a punch in as the fight continues. The officer yells for help. No other police officers are within view. No security guards are around. All activity in the store is focused on the fight.

On your person is a Sure Fire light, folder knife, and a Colt Python. Speed loader is in your pocket. Cell phone is in your pocket. You are permitted to carry a concealed weapon in this jurisdiction.

Describe your thought process. Form an action plan. Describe what actions you would take and why.

(March 2008 #18)

Send replies to: Webmaster